

□□ Writing a college essay can be a very difficult task. However, there are techniques to help make this task easier. The writing process is a three stage approach to planning and creating a college essay. These stages are known as prewriting, writing, and revising. If a student follows this process, she will write a good paper. □□ The first stage of the writing process is called prewriting. There are five prewriting techniques that help writers to understand the topic and purpose of the writing assignment and limit the topic to a manageable and appropriate idea. The techniques are brainstorming, freewriting, diagramming, making a list, and preparing an outline. In brainstorming, you generate ideas for you writing. A writer might view a film and discuss or write their impressions, write a list of ideas for an essay, or discuss a topic with a group of students. You might ask yourself some questions such as What? Why? When? Where? How? and Who? In freewriting, you write non-stop about a subject for a certain amount of time. Spelling or punctuation, mistakes, and finding exact words do not matter. It helps you to get a clearer picture of what you are trying to say. Diagramming is helpful for people who think in a visual way. You can put your idea in a circle or block and branch off examples or other ideas pertaining to it. The fourth technique is making a list. You list as many items that have a relation to your topic. Your goal is to make details and to gather as much material as possible so you have something to start with when you go to write your paper. The last technique is preparing an outline. The thesis statement is clearly stated on the outline and a specific outline format is followed. Outlining gives you a sense of organization and allows you to see quickly if you have enough support for your ideas. After the writer is done prewriting, she moves on to the next step. □□ The second stage for the writing process is called writing. In the writing phase, you make decisions about developing and organizing your ideas into writing and discover what you know about the subject. Insights gained from the prewriting phase help shape ideas into meaning for yourself and others. The writer may prepare a rough draft, focusing on the purpose of the writing and choosing a suitable form for a specific audience. You need a thesis to work with first. The thesis will be your guide while you write your essay. An effective thesis statement should not be an obvious opinion that every reader already shares and focuses on an idea that can be supported evidence rather than emotion. Writers might develop ideas using imagery, logical argument, supporting detail, examples, etc. After the writer is done with the writing stage, she moves on to the third step. □□ The third stage of the writing process is called revising. You clarify and refine your writing in this stage. After you have finished one or more drafts of the essay, you should begin revising your paper. Revising might involve reworking the written expression, so that it clearly and actively conveys the ideas, rearranging words or sentences to create an effect, and inserting punctuation and correcting spelling to assist the reader. At this stage of the writing process, you are interested in clarifying the message by changing words, sentences, or even whole paragraphs. Two examples of revising are editing and proofreading. When you edit your paper, you are looking for mistakes in grammar, mechanics, punctuation, and usage. Proofreading comes after you edit in the final copy for any mistakes in typing or handwriting. Revising might also involve redrafting. □□ As you can clearly see, the writing process is a three step approach that makes writing easier. If you follow these steps, you should be able to write a good college essay. □ □ -----

-----writing college essay very difficult task however there techniques help make this task easier writing process three stage approach planning creating college essay these stages known prewriting writing revising student follows this process will write good paper first stage process called prewriting there five prewriting techniques that help writers understand topic purpose assignment limit topic manageable appropriate idea techniques brainstorming freewriting diagramming making list preparing outline brainstorming generate ideas writer might view film discuss write their impressions write list ideas essay discuss topic with group students might yourself some questions such what when where freewriting stop about subject certain amount time spelling punctuation mistakes finding exact words matter helps clearer picture what trying diagramming helpful people think visual your idea circle block branch examples other ideas pertaining fourth technique making list many items that relation your your goal make details gather much material possible have something start with when paper last technique preparing outline thesis statement clearly stated outline specific format followed outlining gives sense organization allows quickly have enough support after writer done moves next step second stage called phase make decisions about developing organizing into discover what know about subject insights gained from phase help shape into meaning yourself others writer prepare rough draft focusing purpose choosing suitable form specific audience need thesis work with first thesis will guide while effective statement should obvious opinion that every reader already shares focuses idea supported evidence rather than emotion writers might develop using imagery logical argument supporting detail examples after done moves third step third called revising clarify refine after have finished more drafts should begin revising paper involve reworking written expression clearly actively conveys rearranging words sentences create effect inserting punctuation correcting spelling assist reader this interested clarifying message changing words sentences even whole paragraphs examples editing proofreading when edit looking mistakes grammar mechanics punctuation usage proofreading comes edit final copy mistakes typing handwriting also involve redrafting clearly three step approach makes easier follow these steps should able good college Essay, essays, term paper, term paper, term papers, term papers, book reports, study, college, thesis, dissertation, test answers, free research, book research, study help, download essay, download term papers